Randall Raban
Of Counsel

Randall Raban is Of Counsel with Holtzman Vogel where he focuses primarily on commercial, mixed-use, agricultural, and residential real estate matters, including purchase and sale transactions, leases, environmental regulatory compliance, zoning, and other legal issues relating to land use and water use. He has experience negotiating, developing, and managing various types of land use projects, including shell mining operations, agricultural operations, solar farms, and communication tower projects.

Prior to joining the firm, Randall practiced real estate law in Salt Lake City, Utah, before accepting the position of Land and Governmental Affairs Manager for Florida's largest private landowner. In this role, he was responsible for all legal and regulatory compliance matters, as well as the management of land and water resources. Additionally, he also served as the Vice President of a public water utility tasked with managing water assets and working with governmental agencies and local stakeholders on the development of alternative water supply projects aimed at providing additional water resources to meet the increasing demand for water in the State of Florida.
